

Bogus law firms could take advantage of SRA proposals for reform
FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The Solicitors Regulation Authority (SRA) proposals for reform of solicitor regulation could facilitate bogus law firms controlled by criminals, Legal Risk LLP warns today.

The SRA's proposals would allow solicitors to provide services to the public through unregulated alternative legal service providers, with no insurance and no compensation fund, damaging client protection.

Legal Risk LLP, a law firm which specialises in professional regulation and professional indemnity insurance, opposes the change.

Partner Frank Maher explained –

'At present, with very limited exceptions, solicitors can only offer services to the public through an SRA-regulated law firm. The SRA conducts careful checks on the owners, including criminal record checks, whether they are traditional law firms or non-lawyer owned Alternative Business Structures (ABSs).

Under the proposals for change as currently framed, anyone could own a law firm, even someone with a serious criminal record. Although they would not be allowed to offer the full range of services, the changes would make it difficult, if not impossible, for buyers of legal services to know whether or not the solicitor advising them was covered by professional indemnity insurance and the Solicitors' Compensation Fund, as these protections would not apply to the new-style alternative legal service providers.

And causing even more alarm, they would have no way of telling at a glance whether the firm offering services to them had been vetted by the SRA. At a time when fraud is rife, and bogus law firms controlled by criminals are on the rise, this poses a real threat to the public.'
